VIETNAM STOCK MARKET

Bank stocks supported the index in the last trading session of the week.

VN-Index rebounded by 1.7% after a week of decline and returned to the upper channel of the accumulation zone between 1,235 and 1,275 points. Bank stocks were the focal point driving the index's recovery, with 5 banking stocks (BID, CTG, TCB, MBB, LPB) contributing 62% of the weekly gains for the VN-Index. The market gained ground amidst uncertainty, as only 42% of the sectors and 6 out of 18 industries saw positive movement, accompanied by low liquidity. While the Tourism and Entertainment and Retail sectors rose by over 1%, 8 other sectors experienced declines of more than 2% in the small and medium scale. Additionally, international information and Q1 financial results continued to support the market. However, as prices approach resistance levels with low liquidity, after two weeks of advising cautious buying, we recommend investors closely monitor developments before increasing their investment allocation.

Following the assessment of maintaining Vietnam's GDP forecast at 6% and keeping interest rates unchanged by HSBC last week, the Asian Development Bank (ADB) also maintains a growth projection of 6%, despite prolonged uncertainties from external factors. Factors such as foreign direct investment (FDI), remittances, trade surplus, consumer recovery, and robust fiscal policies are considered key drivers for growth in 2024. Various organizations continue to hold a positive outlook on Vietnam's economic prospects. Additionally, according to Fiinpro's update, as of April 12th, 8 companies have reported their financial results with a net profit growth of 47% compared to the same period last year, primarily driven by MBS stocks. The upcoming season of financial disclosures is expected to be lively as many companies reveal positive financial results during their annual general meetings, providing short-term support to the stock market.

GLOBAL STOCK MARKET

Strong fluctuations during the week, US stock indexes remained stable

After a sharp decline due to Consumer Price Index (CPI) information, U.S. stock indices swiftly rebounded upon receiving the Producer Price Index (PPI) figures, which were lower than expected. The Nasdaq index reached a record high during the session on April 11th, while other indices narrowed their losses. The EU600 index rose by 0.5% after the European Central Bank (ECB) kept interest rates unchanged and hinted at the possibility of further monetary policy easing. The Nikkei 225 continues to outperform, with a 1% increase, extending its year-on-year growth to 40%. The U.S. dollar remains strong, with the DXY rising by 1.5%, and 10-year U.S. bonds adding 0.2%. The commodity index dipped slightly by 0.2%, driven by a decline in oil prices (-2.2%) and HRC steel (-5.8%), while gold (+2.3%) and silver (+6%) showed resilience. Market dynamics are rapidly changing based on macroeconomic data released last week.

In March, U.S. Consumer Price Index (CPI) rose by 0.4% month-on-month (MoM) and 3.5% year-on-year (YoY), surpassing the forecasted figures of 0.3% and 3.4%, respectively. This data also exceeded February's 0.3%, indicating that inflation is accelerating. Core CPI (which excludes food and energy) also increased by 0.1% compared to the forecast. Housing costs and energy were the main drivers of CPI growth, with energy rising by 1.1% and housing increasing by 0.4% compared to the previous month. Food prices only saw a modest 0.1% MoM increase. Expectations of cooling housing costs were a central factor in mitigating inflation, but this has not materialized in Q1. The hotter-than-expected inflation has made Federal Reserve officials cautious about short-term monetary policy trends.

- For foreign ETFs: the net withdrawal momentum increased strongly again in March 24, causing the total net withdrawal value of the foreign ETF group to exceed 55 million USD, of which ETF Fubon had the largest capital withdrawal (-33.9 million USD), FTSE was also withdrawn. Net withdrawal (-20.2 million USD), Premia (-1.16 million USD). In Q1/24, the foreign ETF group withdrew a net of 82.4 million USD - marking 4 consecutive months of capital withdrawal. Most ETFs are still in discount status, so net selling pressure will continue to exist but will be somewhat reduced compared to March 24 - the time to close data at the end of the quarter.

- For domestic ETFs: record net withdrawal in Q1/24 (-225.48 million USD) is almost equivalent to the scale of net withdrawal for the whole year 2023 (-267.72 million USD), the trend of capital withdrawal is present in 3 main ETFs, specifically Diamond (-267.72 million USD), E1 (-30.69 million USD), Finlead (-20.88 million USD). The net selling momentum shows no signs of stopping in the context that Thai investors continue to reduce their holdings of CCQ DR despite a relative improvement in recent sessions.

WEEKLY SECTION: Update on foreign capital flows and ETFs in the first quarter of 2024 and forecast for the second quarter

Assessment: Foreign investors have continuously been net sellers for 5 consecutive quarters, however this trend has a clear differentiation between industries. Notably, Chemicals and Healthcare attracted the strongest net foreign capital flows in 11/17 quarters from 2020 to Q1/2024. Chemicals are the industry that foreign investors buy the most during periods of general market volatility - especially in Q4/2021, foreign investors net sold over 22 trillion VND, but the Chemicals, Retail, and Utilities groups were still net bought. In contrast, Basic Resources and Food and Beverage are the two industry groups most heavily affected by the net selling trend in the period 2020-Q1/2024. In Q1/2024, although the general trend is still net selling, foreign investors are still pouring capital heavily into a number of industries such as Insurance, Chemicals and Banking - especially the "king" stock group that has received foreign cash flow. came and ended the series of 5 consecutive quarters of net decline.

2. Assess foreign cash flow trends in the coming time

Assessment: Investors' expectations about when the Fed will officially cut interest rates have been pushed back from March 24 to June 24 and even into the second half of 2024 when FOMC officials continue to be extremely cautious. In order to avoid the "trash" that happened in the 1970s - when the Fed tightened policy but loosened it too soon - and the Fed is waiting for more data to make an appropriate decision. The Fed's caution in the context that the Swiss Central Bank (Swiss Franc accounts for 3.6% of the DXY index), one of the first major central banks to loosen policy (reducing operating interest rates by 25bps), has made the index DXY has tended to increase again since mid-March 24, in addition to the continued domestic VND-USD interest rate differential, putting pressure on the exchange rate - affecting the actions of foreign investors on the stock market in balancing Reminder to withdraw capital to direct capital to countries with good interest rates and higher safety and stability than emerging and frontier markets. Besides, in addition to ETF funds that are showing net withdrawals, some large-scale foreign funds such as VEIL and VOF are still in a deep discount state, so selling pressure continues to exist in the market.

WEEKLY SECTION: Update on foreign capital flows and ETFs in the first quarter of 2024 and forecast for the second quarter

Forecasting trends in the near future: It is expected that foreign investors will not have positive signals immediately, but will gradually improve, especially at the end of Q2 and Q3/2024 based on the following factors:

(1) When the Fed begins to reverse policy, according to the most recent FOMC meeting, the FED forecasts that there will be 3 interest rate cuts this year and the market is expecting that the Fed may act in June 2024 - however However, this will depend heavily on macroeconomic data in the near future when the newly released March 24 CPI data shows that inflation is at 3.5% - continuing to be far from the 2% target and exceeding the target. market forecast.

(2) The end of the second quarter is an important milestone for the upgrade process of Vietnam's stock market: at this time there will be more updated information and assessments on solutions to remove bottlenecks in the upgrade process according to FTSE Russell's assessment includes: officially approving the contents of resolving pre-funding issues and actually operating the new trading system (KRX). If the above solutions are implemented synchronously and drastically, the possibility of soon being approved to upgrade by FTSE Russell in September 2024 is relatively feasible and investors need to carefully observe the net buying behavior of the sector. foreign exchange for large capitalization stocks, meeting the criteria of liquidity, "foreign room"...

(3) Exchange rate pressure will be partly relieved when the State Bank signals its readiness to intervene to stabilize the market if necessary. In addition to early consideration of amending Circular 02 to stabilize the currency market and amending Decree 24 to avoid over-goldenizing the economy, thereby reducing pressure on the foreign exchange market.

(4) In addition, some foreign capital sales at listed companies from Q2 onwards may reduce pressure on foreign currency supply and demand as well as net selling pressure from foreign investors.

- RSI increased from 48 to 57 points.
- MACD is below the signal line and still above 0. Liquidity decreased by 30% compared to last week.
- VN-Index increased again above SMA 20 and SMA 50, SMA 200.

Conclusion: VN-Index experienced downward pressure, but it rebounded and returned to the accumulation zone above the 20-day Simple Moving Average (SMA20). Although liquidity remains low, the improved transaction value indicates that funds are shifting toward stocks with large market capitalization and nominal value. The VN-Index is still within the consolidation range, showing good market resilience, but liquidity needs improvement as it establishes a new accumulation zone in the 1,235-1,275 point range.
