GLOBAL STOCK MARKETS

The U.S. stock market remains resilient amid macroeconomic and tariff news

After falling midweek due to weak CPI data, U.S. stocks quickly rebounded following news that President Trump signed an order imposing countervailing tariffs on foreign countries—though these tariffs are not immediately effective. Beyond the impact of macro data and the earnings announcement season, the tariff news has become the focal point and has had a significant effect on market movements.

- U.S. stock indices maintained an average increase of 1.7%; EU600 rose by 1.9%, Nikkei 225 by 1.0%, and CSI 300 by 1.2%.
- The commodity index was up 1.9%, gas prices surged by 12%, and metals continued a strong upward trend—with precious metals (Gold +2.6%, Silver +4.4%) and base metals (Copper +5.1%, Zinc +3.1%) leading the way; agricultural products (Sugar +4.3%, Coffee +5.5%).
- The DXY index fell by 1.1% while the U.S. 10-year treasury yield increased by 0.05%.

Speaking before a Congressional hearing, the Fed Chair noted that the overall U.S. economy remains robust with a strong labor market. Inflation has cooled but still exceeds the 2% target. Under current conditions, Powell stated that the Fed is in no hurry to ease monetary policy. The federal funds rate, currently between 4.25% and 4.5%, is providing flexibility. Subsequent January CPI data, which showed a 0.5% increase and pushed inflation to 3%, further supports the expectation that the Fed will hold rates steady—possibly through the summer—after having reduced the standard lending rate by 1% in the latter half of 2024.

Items to watch in the coming week include: Japanese GDP; Chinese 1- and 5-year interest rates; monetary policy rates and minutes from the Reserve Bank of Australia and New Zealand; CPI figures for Canada and the UK; unemployment benefit applications; PMI and FOMC policy minutes; PMI data from the UK, EU, and the U.S.; as well as an extraordinary session of the Vietnamese National Assembly.

VIETNAM STOCK MARKET

VN-Index increased slightly, extending its four-week gain streak

VN-Index rose by 0.1%, thanks to a weekend up session with a 5% improvement in liquidity. The index increased by 0.8% along with a 13% rise in liquidity.

- After three weeks of gains by large-cap stocks, capital flows have shifted to mid- and small-cap stocks across various sectors. Besides the hot stocks, there is a rapid rotation among sectors.
- The breadth of advancing stocks narrowed, with gains in only 8 out of 18 sectors. The Insurance, Construction & Materials, and Chemicals sectors gradually advanced by 0.9–6%, while the Retail, Basic Resources, and Personal & Household Goods sectors declined by 2.4–5%.
- Foreign investors reduced their net selling to USD 74 million, following net sales of USD 166 million the previous week. The 9th extraordinary session of the 15th National Assembly took place from February 12 to 19, reviewing and passing the Law on Amending the Organization of the National Assembly, the Government, and Local Authorities, and on Promulgating Legal Documents; as well as resolutions on reorganizing the state apparatus and restructuring the National Assembly and the Government. In addition, the National Assembly reviewed decisions on setting an economic growth target of at least 8%, piloting special mechanisms and policies for the development of urban rail in Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City, the Lao Cai – Hanoi – Haiphong rail, and the mechanism for constructing the Ninh Thuan nuclear project. The laws and policies passed in this session serve as the basis for streamlining the state apparatus and implementing key national projects.

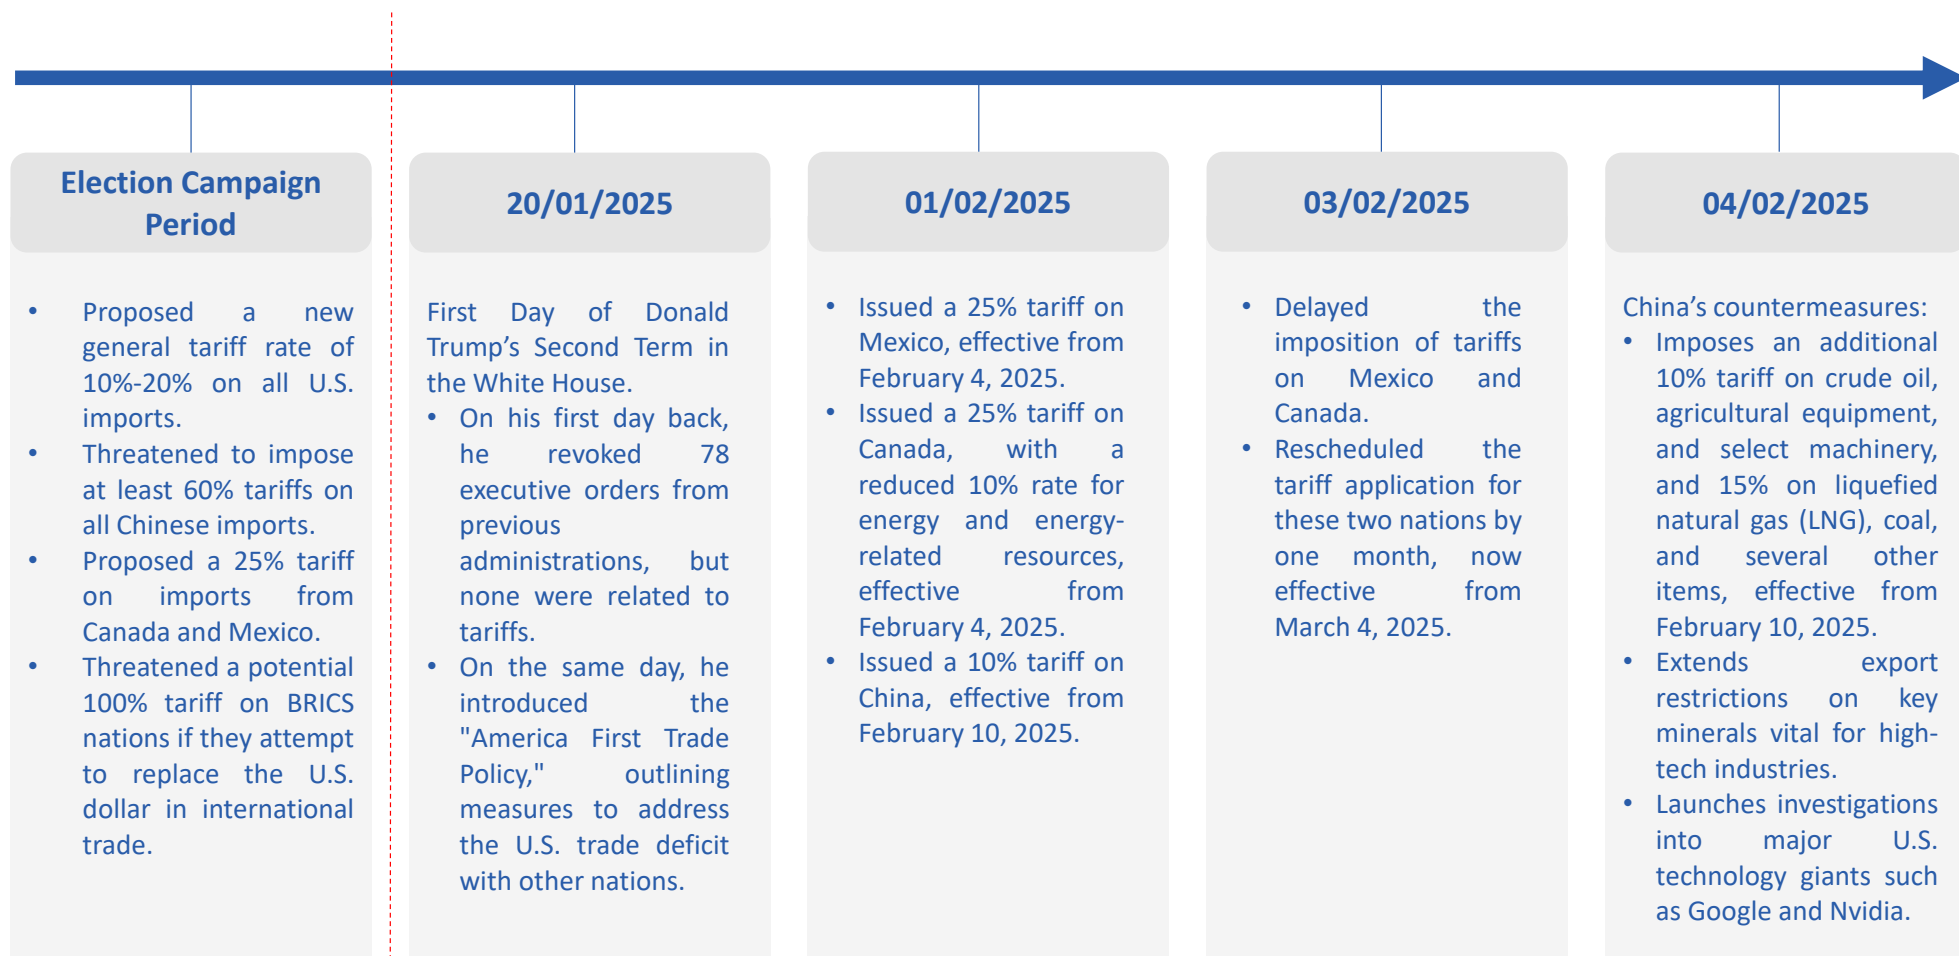

We maintain our view from last week, believing that investors should consider locking in profits on individual stocks that have surged, while maintaining a reasonable portfolio allocation, as the VN-Index is nearing a short-term peak, cash flows remain stagnant, and the mid-term market trend is still unclear.

WEEKLY TOPIC: Trade war 2.0

3. Trump's Trade Policy 2.0 – Impact Forecast (Base Scenario)

Economic growth

Tariff hikes slow economic growth:

- Increased tariffs raise input material costs, elevating product prices, impacting corporate profits, and hindering expansion plans.
- Higher prices drive up consumer costs, exerting inflationary pressure, influencing short-term economic policies, and contracting overall demand.
- Tariff retaliation negatively affects exports, businesses, and the labor market.

According to Tax Foundation research:

- Tariff hikes may reduce long-term economic output by approximately 0.4% to 1.7%.

Foreign Direct Investment (FDI)

BSC maintains the view that Vietnam will remain an attractive destination for FDI, as highlighted in our previous reports, due to:

- "China +1" : Supply chain shifts away from China.
- Favorable business environment: Low corporate taxes, stable geopolitical conditions, and extensive bilateral and multilateral trade agreements with key global economies.
- Strategic geographic location along major global shipping routes.
- Major corporate commitments from firms like Nvidia, Amkor, and Hyosung investing in Vietnam.

Taxation

Exchange rates

- Tariffs have a temporary impact on inflation, creating short-term pressure on exchange rates. However, in the long run, rising cost-push inflation will gradually be neutralized by declining aggregate demand. As a result, it does not alter the medium-term inflation trajectory, which could lead the FED to adjust its monetary policy direction.
- In recent years, net capital outflows from China have reached record levels, and exchange rates have depreciated significantly. Therefore, China does not need to devalue its currency as it did in 2018 to gain a trade advantage.

Trade flow

Based on the baseline scenario, we maintain a neutral stance on Vietnam's overall trade outlook:

- Slower economic growth due to the trade war will lead to a decline in aggregate demand, indirectly impacting Vietnam's export sector.
- Compared to the product groups targeted by tariffs during Trump's first term, Vietnamese goods are largely unaffected.
- Vietnam currently holds a Comprehensive Strategic Partnership with the United States.

TECHNICAL ANALYSIS: Retest the short-term peak zone for two consecutive weeks

Daily Chart: The price action closely resembles last week's movements. After a sharp decline at the start of the week, which filled the previous gap-up, the VN-Index quickly rebounded to retest the short-term peak at 1,275 points while maintaining its short-term upward channel. The late-week rally created a gap-up and surpassed 1,275 points, but this was insufficient to confirm a classic momentum breakout due to the formation of a doji candle and unconvincing liquidity. Technical indicators remain neutral.

Key observations from the daily chart:

RSI slightly declined from 61 to 59.

MACD crossed above the signal line and the zero level. Trading volume increased 5% compared to last week.

VN-Index surpassed the SMA 20, SMA 50, SMA 100, and SMA 200.

Conclusion: The VN-Index has returned to its short-term peak at 1,275 points after spending most of the session fluctuating below 1,270 points. While surpassing 1,275 points strengthens the short-term trend, the medium-term outlook remains uncertain. In the short term, VN-Index is still in a positive phase, with no divergence signals emerging, meaning that consolidation around 1,275 points could open the door for a retest of the 2024 peak at 1,300 points. However, since VN-Index has not recorded more than four consecutive weeks of gains since August 2023, we highlight the possibility of a pullback next week due to short-term profit-taking pressure.
