GLOBAL STOCK MARKETS

Financial Markets Plunge Following Tariff Shock from President Trump

Global financial markets tumbled into turmoil after President Trump announced a sweeping tariff plan. The U.S. stock market dropped an average of 3.5%, with the majority of the decline occurring during the April 3 session. Multinational consumer goods producers such as Nike and import-focused retailers like Five Below and Gap led the sell-off, posting losses between 7–12%. The shockwave extended across European and Asian markets. Meanwhile, the U.S. Dollar Index (DXY) weakened, and U.S. Treasury yields fell below 4%—the lowest since October 2024.

- U.S. stock indices declined an average of -3.5%, EU600 dropped -4.2%, Nikkei 225 plunged -8.7%, and CSI 300 lost -1.8%.

- The commodity index declined by 1.1%, with broad-based declines across categories: energy (crude oil -6.4%, coal -2.6%), precious metals (gold was flat while silver dropped -8.1%), industrial metals (iron ore -5.2%; lead, aluminum, and nickel all fell by over 4%), and agricultural products (rubber -7.2%, cotton -5%, while cocoa surged +15.6%).

- The DXY index fell -1.5%, while the U.S. 10-year Treasury yield dropped -0.3%.

The U.S.'s newly proposed tariff policy became the focal point of the market this past week. President Trump announced reciprocal tariffs: a 10% import tax effective from April 5, and elevated tariffs targeting countries with trade surpluses with the U.S. starting April 9. The methodology used to determine tariff levels has sparked controversy, as it relies on a simplified formula—dividing the bilateral trade deficit by the total import value from that country—then adjusting based on the import price elasticity and the pass-through rate of tariffs to final goods. This implies that the U.S. is focusing solely on goods trade, disregarding services trade. The policy allows the U.S. flexibility to pursue bilateral deals, while placing pressure on counterpart nations to reduce tariffs and increase purchases of U.S. goods.

Key data to watch in the upcoming week include: EU retail sales; interest rate decision and monetary policy minutes from the Reserve Bank of New Zealand; China's CPI and new loan data; UK GDP; and the U.S. CPI, PPI, jobless claims, and FOMC meeting minutes.

VIETNAM STOCK MARKET

VN-Index Plunges Sharply Following Tariff Shock

The VN-Index dropped sharply by 8%, with dip-buying activities during the two-day sell-off at the end of the week boosting trading liquidity by 57% compared to the previous week. The market was rattled by negative news on tariffs, aggressive foreign selling, and panic-driven sentiment, resulting in a steep decline and a wave of limit-down stocks during the April 3 session. However, bottom-fishing at low price levels, along with the respite offered by the upcoming national holiday, is expected to help stabilize the market in the near term.

- 89% of HoSE-listed stocks declined, with VIC and GEX being rare large-cap gainers amid widespread losses across all stock groups.

The sell-off was indiscriminate, affecting nearly all sectors and individual stocks.

- All 18 sectors posted losses, with chemicals, retail, and media falling over 10%; meanwhile, auto parts and real estate declined by less than 5%. Notably, despite the downturn, dip-buying was active, though sectors such as media, information technology, and healthcare saw lower liquidity.

- Foreign investors intensified net selling, with outflows reaching USD 340 million, up significantly from USD 82 million the previous week.

The U.S. announced a 46% reciprocal tariff on imports from Vietnam. According to U.S. Customs data, Vietnam's export value to the U.S. was USD 141 billion in 2024, with USD 138 billion subject to tariffs after deducting exempted goods. Sectors most affected include electrical equipment, machinery and mechanical appliances, furniture, and apparel and footwear, due to their large export volumes. The announced tariff rate represents a ceiling, and bilateral negotiations remain possible; however, the high tariff level and the surprising calculation method exceeded market expectations (refer to the U.S. Reciprocal Tariff Policy Toward Vietnam report). Deputy Prime Minister's visit to the U.S. from April 6–14 is expected to open a dialogue channel between the two countries, following the Vietnamese Minister of Industry and Trade's formal request to the U.S. for a postponement of the tariff decision.

The new tariff policy poses elevated risks to Vietnam's economy and stock market. As trade negotiations will take time, investors are reminded to prioritize risk management, reduce margin exposure, and remain cautious during the market's search for a new bottom.

WEEKLY TOPIC: Impact of the Reciprocal Tariffs Proposed by the U.S. on April 2, 2025

On April 2, 2025 (U.S. time), President Donald Trump announced a 10% tariff on all goods imported into the United States, effective from April 5, 2025; and by April 9, 2025, additional reciprocal tariffs would be imposed on certain countries, with Vietnam expected to face a 46% tariff.

To provide investors with a comprehensive view of the impact of U.S. trade policy on Vietnam, BSC Research has prepared a report titled “Impact of the Reciprocal Tariffs Proposed by the U.S. on April 2, 2025” (report link on page 5). The main contents of the report include:

- Information on the tariffs announced by the U.S. administration and the methodology for calculating the reciprocal tariffs;
- Current status of U.S.-Vietnam bilateral trade;
- Assessment of the impact of the reciprocal tariffs on Vietnam;
- Investment scenarios (regarding the stock market and corporate sectors).

Below is a brief summary of several key insights from the report:

BSC Research compiled

WEEKLY TOPIC: Impact of the Reciprocal Tariffs Proposed by the U.S. on April 2, 2025

2. BSC Research's General Perspective

- Impact on the macroeconomy:

- + The 46% tariff is negotiable, and Vietnam is actively seeking solutions. It is likely that the actual tariff rate, if implemented, will be lower than the currently announced level (which represents the worst-case scenario)
- + If applied, the reciprocal tariffs are expected to affect FDI inflows, export-oriented businesses targeting the U.S. market, and indirectly impact supporting sectors such as industrial parks and logistics. The policy could also influence the exchange rate, GDP growth, and both FDI and FII capital flows

- Impact on the stock market:

- + In countries previously subject to U.S. tariffs (e.g., Canada, Mexico), stock markets typically stabilized within one month after implementation.
- + The Vietnamese stock market has historically stabilized and rebounded within 1 week to 1 month following major sell-offs (2018–2024).
- + Only about 5.5% of HOSE's market capitalization comprises companies exporting to the U.S.
- + The export proportions and applicable tariff rates vary significantly by company, so the impact cannot be generalized across all exporters.
- + Investors are advised to remain cautious, reassess their leverage ratios, and focus on companies that are less affected by the tariff policy.

TECHNICAL ANALYSIS: Broad-based sell-off, VN-Index breaks below key support levels

Daily Chart: After Failing to Hold the 20-Day simple moving average (SMA20) on April 2, the VN-Index Unexpectedly Plunged, Breaking Through Short-Term Support Levels and the Mid-Term Price Channel. The index posted a sharp decline, forming a downside gap under intense selling pressure triggered by negative tariff news. Despite the steep drop, liquidity surged thanks to bottom-fishing activity—particularly during the April 4 session, which significantly narrowed intraday losses. Following two consecutive sharp declines, technical indicators have moved into oversold territory, providing short-term support for dip-buying momentum.

Key technical highlights on the daily chart:

- The RSI dropped from 52 to 20 points.
- The MACD fell below both the signal line and the zero level. Trading volume surged by 57% compared to the previous week.
- The VN-Index declined below its 20-day, 50-day, 100-day, and 200-day SMAs. The current weekly candlestick pattern resembles that of the week of April 15, 2024.

Conclusion: The unexpected tariff announcement broke the VN-Index out of its prior consolidation, triggering a sharp decline that erased all gains accumulated since November 2024. With the index falling below key medium-term support levels, the market is now in the process of short-term bottom-fishing. On the positive side, strong dip-buying liquidity has emerged. The index rebounded after breaching the 50% Fibonacci retracement of the medium-term cycle and approaching the lower boundary of the sideways channel established since March 2024. Looking ahead to next week, the market will enter a short pause, offering time to absorb and evaluate the tariff-related developments. The VN-Index will need a recovery phase to fill the price gap below the 1,230-point level. If positive news emerges after the holiday, it could open the door for a sharp V-shaped rebound back above 1,300 points.
