STOCK MARKET

The VN-Index surged at the opening but faced strong profit-taking pressure around the 1,565 level, which pushed the index down sharply. The sell-off persisted throughout the day, intensifying toward the end of the session. At the close, the VN-Index settled at 1,493.41 points, down more than 64 points from yesterday. Market breadth turned negative, with all 18 out of 18 sectors declining, led by Financial Services and Media. In terms of foreign trading, net selling was recorded on the HSX and UPCOM, while net buying occurred on the HNX. The VN-Index has pulled back to the previous peak zone of 1,490–1,500. In a positive scenario, bottom-fishing demand may emerge at this level and help contain the sell-off. However, investors should remain cautious of the possibility that the VN-Index may continue to fall due to inertia, potentially heading toward the 1,460–1,480 zone.

FUTURES CONTRACTS

Futures contracts decreased according to the movement of VN30.
