The VN-Index attempted to break above the 1,800 level today but was unsuccessful. After fluctuating within the 1,780–1,795 range, the index retreated and closed at 1,761.06, down more than 4 points from yesterday. Market breadth was negative with 15 out of 18 sectors declining, led by the Automobiles & Parts sector, followed by Media, Oil & Gas, and Basic Resources. Regarding foreign investors’ activity, they were net sellers on HSX and HNX, while slightly net buyers on UPCOM. The market experienced a corrective session following its short-term rally. In the near term, the VN-Index may continue to follow an upward yet consolidating trend. Moreover, the market’s uptrend will need stronger liquidity support to advance toward new highs in a more sustainable manner.
