Market highlights

VN-Index and HNX-Index suddenly fell sharply at the end of today trading session and finished at their today lows.

Oil & Gas and Banks stocks declined, directly impacting negatively on VN-Index and HNX-Index.

Some stocks had significant price volatilities include SHN (+ 9.7%), OGC (+ 4%), JVC (-6.4%) and FIT (-9.6%).

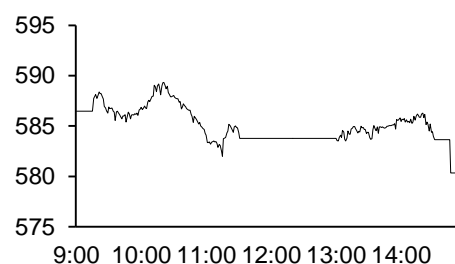

Recommendations

Although the VN-Index's support level of 580 points has not yet broken, the sharp dip of VN-Index by the end of today session made numerous investors nervous. Moreover, the continuous decline of JVC in recent days also partly influence investor's sentiment. As a result, although there are many positive factors supporting the market such as demand of foreign investors, Q2 earnings expectation or TPP agreement, short-term correction may occur due to several important stock groups as banks, securities, real estate have gained rapidly in recent sessions.

We have recommended that investors should partly take profits in highly profitable gainers. The market will most likely to have a shaking off in next 1-2 sessions, so investors should patiently wait for new buying opportunities in the lower price level.

Technical views

A black candle with long body among with large volumes have appeared, indicating strong selling pressure in the market. In addition, two bands of Bollinger Bands indicator have narrowed the gaps, which suggest that increasing momentum will probably weaken. Moreover, MACD line has moved away the 0-line, and as we know, the greater the distance, the sharper falling as profit-taking pressure come back.

Therefore, VN-Index will probably decline in the next few days.
